A History of The Potomac Region 1953-1993

The Potomac Region of
The American Society of Photogrammetry
A History (1953-1993)

A history, according to Webster, is a chronological record of significant events. The History of the Potomac Region of the American Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing encompasses a period of changing technology in the scientific measurement of the Earth's surface, from the use of ground techniques to aerial photography, which has been supplemented and expanded by satellite-borne electronic measuring devices. Technicians working in the fields of photogrammetry and remote sensing have had to adapt to digital mapping and printing techniques. Those engaged in Research and Development are constantly devising and inventing new methods to extract and present significant Earth data such as geologic, hydrologic, cultural and a variety of earth patterns undreamed of when the American Society of Photogrammetry was formed in 1934 in Washington, DC.

The Potomac Region, site of the formation of the Society, has been a moving and vital force in originating and managing the Annual Conventions at which the latest engineering and scientific papers have been presented; they have also participated in joint meetings with other professional societies such as the American Congress on Surveying and Mapping, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the Society of Photographic Scientists and Engineers, the Society of Photographic Instrumentation Engineers, the International Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing, and many other similar organizations. Many of the Potomac Region officers have been nominated to serve as Directors for these events, both nationally and internationally.

Photogrammetric Engineering and Remote Sensing, a pre-eminent journal in its field, has been developed from a quarterly to a monthly publication because of the demand for publishing technical papers caused by the expansion of the Society's membership beyond 8,000 world-wide. The journal is managed and edited in the Potomac Region with assistance from all of the other Regions. Since the Potomac Region contains the headquarters of many of the larger mapping, geological, natural resource and military organizations, it provides a fruitful area for recruiting new members for the Society.

The Region has also been requested to lend its expertise to many special sessions such as the Analytical Plotter Workshop, Color Photo Workshop, Geographic Systems Workshop, Land Information Systems Sessions Digital Plotter Workshop and other technical sessions.

When the American Society of Photogrammetry was formed on July 29, 1934, there was no regional structure. The "Virginia Section" was formed on May 8, 1952. It then included Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and the New England states.

A Region is composed of people; this history lists some of those who made extra contributions of time, effort and money along with personal sacrifices to further the aims of the Potomac Region. Earlier histories have listed the founders and succeeding officers of the ASP, this history begins after the "Virginia Section" was formed.
